

Our impact on workers

Thanks to the combined efforts of our company, trade union and NGO members over the last 5 years – and our work with partners and allies around the world – ETI is proud to report that:

2.5 million

workers are experiencing improvement in one or more of the rights described in the ETI Base Code

30,000 workers

in prioritised supply chains can report positive change in their working conditions

400,000 workers

have increased knowledge of their rights

411 workplaces

have in place mechanisms through which workers can voice their workplace concerns

This has been accomplished through:

56

joint initiatives, with

1,260

active organisation participations, into which

£2.3 million

has been directly invested by member organisations.

By 2020 we want to see

- The 10 million workers in our company members' global supply chains enjoying improved protection of the rights described in the Base Code
- Greater respect of these rights by those they work for
- And, better access to remedy when their rights are abused

These fundamental changes are likely to result in sustainable improvements in global supply chains to the benefit of workers. They have enabled suppliers to share problems – and identified ways to resolve them. And that means suppliers are now better able to respond openly, rapidly and transparently to workers' complaints.
